Right to File a Complaint: The California Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1973 gives workers the right to file a complaint about workplace safety and health hazards.

Names of Complainants Must Be Kept Confidential: The name of any person who submits a complaint to Cal/OSHA must be kept confidential by law unless the person requests otherwise.

Please note: the guidelines are based on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s (CDC) recommendations and offer different levels of protective measures depending on the workplace, such as healthcare settings, prisons, homeless shelters, drug treatment programs. Additionally, there are general guidelines for workplaces categorized as “Employers Not Covered by ADT Standards.” There is also an additional set of guidelines for work settings where there is significant risk of COVID-19 infection (for example, a workplace where employee have close interactions with many people throughout the day).
